INTRODUCTION

Buying new equipment is often expensive and may not be an option for some people. Buying second-hand can be a cheaper way of finding solutions to daily living difficulties, but choice is more limited. You must make sure that you do not compromise on your essential requirements. If you are unsure about what you need, contact the occupational therapist at your local social services for advice; or find out if there is a Disabled Living Centre (DLC) near you. DLC s are non-commercial organisations set up to provide information and advice on disability equipment. They all have equipment demonstration centres where you can visit to see and try out ranges of equipment. To find out the address of your nearest centre, contact:

You must check that what you are buying is in good working order. You do have certain consumer rights when buying second-hand, e.g. the seller must accurately describe the product he/she is selling to you; and you should be made fully aware of any faults that need attention. If possible, obtain a written description of the product from the seller before you buy so that should you find any faults, you can more easily get your money back. There are basically two sources of second-hand equipment: disability equipment retailers and private individuals.

Advice and information for consumers from the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA)

The MHRA has a useful webpage explaining Do's and Don'ts of buying:

<http://www.mhra.gov.uk/Safetyinformation/Generalsafetyinformationandadvice/Adviceandinformationforconsumers/Buyingmedicaldevices/CON019611>

Buying from a Disability Equipment Retailer

Some commercial suppliers of equipment buy unwanted items, recondition them, then offer them for sale with a short guarantee of, for example, three months. Some might also sell ex-demonstration models. Buying second-hand from a retailer is generally more expensive than buying from a private individual, but the equipment is likely to have been serviced and should be in reasonable working order.

Buying from a Private Individual

Some mainstream magazines and several disability organisations publish journals that contain advertisements for second-hand equipment. If you are buying second-hand from a private individual, you must make sure that:

- the equipment has been regularly maintained;
- that you also receive accompanying literature, for example a care manual;
- that batteries have been regularly charged (usually once a month is sufficient if the equipment is not being used); and that you receive instructions on how to use the equipment properly and safely.

You will also need to find a local company able to service the equipment and carry out future repairs.

SOURCES OF SECOND-HAND EQUIPMENT

Websites

The following web sites carry advertisements for second-hand disability equipment:

- Disability Equipment Register
www.disabilityequipment.org.uk
- DisabledGear.com
www.DisabledGear.com
- Ebay Bay UK's Disability Resources page
<http://pages.ebay.co.uk/zones/disabilityresources.html>
- Mobility Market

Disability Equipment Retailers

For addresses of disability equipment retailers in your area, look in your local phone book (usually listed under 'disability' or 'mobility'); contact your local Disabled Living Centre; or contact the Disabled Living Foundation's Helpline on 0845 130 9177 (10 am to 4 pm). We have a list, although it is not comprehensive, of retailers on our database.
